points. In some instances, the same points were pictured up to six times!!! Also, the pictures were not professional at all, and the points shown do not even come close to representing the variety and types of materials that have been found in the area. I feel certain this book was prepared in very short order and involved very little research and time. Based on the extensive collections available from the Crump Lake area and the great body of literature available on the Great Basin, including the scholarly treatises on the ancient cultures of the Western United States, I had anticipated that an expensive book of this nature would be much more thorough, both in terms of the types of points and blades used by the Paleo and Desert Archaic cultures that inhabited the region and, at the very least, a somewhat detailed description of how they lived and what their cultures were like. It is a very disappointing book!!! 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Enjoyed the content and the photography. By Janet I found the book (Kindle version) very interesting and the photography is wonderful.... it gives history of the area and I would recommend the book if you are the least bit curious about the area or projectile points. And as I said, the photographic documentation of the objects is superb. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Ancient Projectile Points From Oregon's CRUMP LAKE ~An Artifact Collection~ Since ancient cultures first discovered the remote Warner Valley in south central Oregon, in what is now high desert, the people found sustenance and shelter to their liking in the highlands and along the shore around the 300 foot deep lake that once filled the 60 mile long valley at the end of the last Ice Age. Over thousands of years, as the lake receded and left shallow remnant lakes behind, the people continued to hunt and fish around Crump Lake and the other lakes in the valley. This continued for 12,000 years and more, up until the late 1800s. Here are representative authentic artifacts from those cultural groups. From ancient pioneering groups who were in this remote valley long before the Clovis culture/technology was brought into the Basin and Pacific Northwest. From the end of the Ice Age up until the last aboriginal American tribes left the high desert and European American farmers and cattlemen tried to make a go of life in Warner Valley after the Civil War. From 12,000 years ago to as recent as 200 years ago. Stone tools which served them well for so long. Knives, spear and lance points, dart points and arrow heads. It's a look at "Ancient Projectile Points From Oregon's CRUMP LAKE ~An Artifact Collection~ 144 pages, full color. Still, mostly black and gray, what with all the obsidian! Some other colors and jaspers for variety.
