Sweet showgirl melts card sharp's heartBy Tracy VestRecent widow and Vegas showgirl Treena McCall is not sure if she wants to give her husband's prized autographed 1927 World Series baseball to his estranged son, Jackson. Further complicating the matter - she does not know where to find him since he did not even bother to come to the funeral.A chance meeting with a sexy poker champion gets her heart racing again. Jax Gallagher is everything she ever wanted in a man. Talk dark and handsome... he is even more than she ever wanted, as he is also her late husband's estranged son, with the intention of keeping his parentage a secret, and romancing the ball right out from under her. She is not sure she wants to get involved, as she needs to concentrate on the career she put on hold while nursing her husband,, and going through both their life savings.The night that Jax found out his father died is the night that he realized there would be no reconciliation. He would never have the chance to understand why his father kept him at arm's length and never was there for him. A math prodigy, Jax was shipped off at an early age to fend for himself in an adult world. Making a rookie error, he was out of cash and bet the 1927 baseball to a Russian card sharp, and lost.As he sets about to insinuate himself into Treena's life, he does not count on falling for her, as she is nothing like the gold digging bimbo he thought she would be. As they get closer, and the Russian more adamant about getting his baseball, Jax struggles with his heart and his conscience, and discovers that his father was not the callous bastard he thought him to be. And that baseball could make all Treena's financial dreams come true. What's a guy to do?1 of 1

She mixes funny with romantic (sexually romantic as well as emotionally) and if your dealing with a true mystery she doesn't let you down. I would never hesitate to read anything she writes.
